Read Dr. Paul's latest book, The Secret Psychology of How We Fall in Love, to discover a 9-step program for understanding the dating brain and finding lasting love!

Confident, competitive, and analytical, you are a fierce and steady protector of your friends, family, and all things you hold dear. You're extremely ambitious, targeted, and determined—almost to a fault of being self-centered—and are an undeniable force of industriousness.

While you're logical, orderly, and respect the rules like the King and Queen, you're much more assertive and always ready to dive into action or conflict. Because you prefer to be somewhat isolated, you tend to have few very good friends, but these friends definitely count on you whenever there's a task to be done with precision.

Location on the cognitive-emotional spectrum

Located in the lower left quadrant of this spectrum, your personality reflects your strong emotional sense of confidence. Your style of thinking tends to be more left-brained—logical, sequential, rational, and objective.

Attractions

Located on the other end of the spectrum, your perfect opposite is a nurturing and creative Lover.

Quick read

To find out if someone is a Lover, get their attention by speaking softly and touching them lightly, perhaps on the shoulder. Then say "I can tell you have a lot of feelings and stories to share. Can you tell me one?" If they light up and respond to your emotional sensitivity, you have found a Lover. You've also given that person exactly the positive emotional energy they need.

Advice

"Give up the battle to win the war." Dare to be occasionally weak to be seen as "real" to others and find that enemies can become friends if you let them have a bit of the power.
